Tuesday, October 14, 2016 Week 17, Reverse 'Halloween' Did you know that the night of October 31st is known as "Halloween" in some countries? The observance of this day is connected to the ancient Celtic festival of Samhain. It is believed that Halloween originated with the early Irish Celts who believed that the night before the day of the new year was the time when the boundary between the living and the dead could be crossed. At this time, the souls of the dead visited the living. The holiday of Halloween seems to have evolved from an older tradition of the goddess-like beings known as the Fair Folk that lived at the edge of the world. All of the Fair Folk were once mortal beings who had lived great and mighty lives but were now doomed to vanish from the earth. Like the Celtic ancestors, the Fair Folk came to visit the earth's people. They would leave gifts for the living and show them the way to the Fairy Realm of Asgard. Eventually, the Celts stopped celebrating Samhain as a time of death, but began to celebrate it as a time of hope. On the day of Samhain, October 31, in some countries, this holiday becomes "All Hallows Eve", the eve of All Saints Day, when people seek to reach the afterlife and ask the favors of deceased relatives. We live in a time when the world is celebrating life. Our world is full of death and destruction. The face of the earth is growing darker. We are living in a reverse Halloween in which death is invading the Earth. We are living in reverse "All Hallows Eve". When the Hebrews arrived in the Promised Land, they asked God, "Who is this King of Canaan who is making us afraid?" (Numbers 13:22). Do you know that it was when the Hebrews were in fear that they turned to Moses and God, asking, "Who is this God of yours that we are fearing? Why can't we see him?" (Deuteronomy 5:26). Remember, fear drives us away from God. We do not want to learn from Him, to be

is a standardized file format, for representing files as arrays of bytes, commonly used in computer software applications. Register is a text file, which is used by programs to read input from the keyboard or from standard input. It is the official way for programs to take input from the keyboard, or to read data from the operating system. Programs can read register files to automate tasks. To improve user experience, Microsoft developed the Register File Association (RFA) to standardize the naming conventions for programs that read register files. The standardization has made it possible for programs to read data from register files without worrying about the underlying implementation, thus increasing user experience.
